

Abstract

Disclosed is an internal combustion engine component (1) comprising at least one area (4) that is subject to a greater thermal load than another area (5) during operation of the internal combustion engine. The area (4) that is subjected to a greater thermal load is provided with a lower heat expansion coefficient (α_2) than the area (5) which is subject to a lower thermal load.